Photographs have also been produced showing the quotations published on the same railroad securities in the New York Herald at the same period. The discrepancy noted beginning to tween the two papers is explained by the bankers on the ground that The Richmond quotations were in Confederate money, which was already beginning to show depreciation, while the New York quotations were in United States money. Governor Stuart is giving his immediate personal attention to hurrying forward the lime plant. After many delays a practical agreement has been reached between the State and Dr Leavell, owner of a tract near Staunton. Long delays were encountered in negotiations as to side tracks, wate supply and other matters, but those have now been adjusted to the satis box cars on the Southern Railway tracks near the foot of Stockton Street, and caused a blaze which could be seen from nearly every section of the city. The cars had been burning for nearly a half hour, with several members of the South Richmond fire department watching it to see that the flames did not spread, when the alarm was turned in by some unknown party.

First Assistant Fire Chief Raffo and the South Richmond fire company responded only to find the cars already practically destroyed and in a position which made it impossible for the department to render assistance. They were watched to see that none of the buildings in the vicinity became ignited. The cars are said to have been empty.
